Learning Opportunity

Target Audience: All administrators, instructional leaders and teachers are encouraged to attend.

Teachers have been called the “lynchpin” of a system of professionals (e.g., speech language pathologists, occupational therapists, counsellors) and family members that work with students. Teachers may feel overwhelmed when trying to coordinate with others. Many of the teachers who work with educational assistants have little-to-no training for leadership or team management. Learning how to “audit” the practices of your educational assistant(s) will help you understand how educational assistants can be best used to maximize classroom effectiveness.

Presenters

Dr. Jeffrey MacCormack

Dr. Jeffrey MacCormack is an associate professor of Educational Psychology and Inclusion at the University of Lethbridge, Faculty of Education. As a former classroom teacher, Dr. MacCormack's research on after-school programs, executive functions, social competence, and play-based learning is also informed by 10 years of experience teaching elementary students and many years of teaching post-secondary adult learners. His work has focused on creating spaces where youth can thrive.
